Market Outlook and Investment Strategy

Decent US macro figures and hawkish statements from US Fed make the possibility of interest rate hike in June rising higher than previous expectation. In June, the risk of UK exiting EU also arises as the vote date is approaching. The global market is still in the risk-off mode.

China reported retreated macro figures for April. The significant change of China's economic policies to further stimulate the economy was to emphasis more on the fiscal expanding policies. Meanwhile, further room for loosening on monetary policies is limited. As a result, the outstanding balance of aggregated financing has shrunk significantly in April. The M2 growth also retreated. The "authority person" has stated that China's economic growth shape would be L-shape; which indicated that China's leadership has accepted the slowing economic growth for the mid-to-long term. We would like to revise our estimate time for a possible solid recovery till next year, instead of in 2H of 2016.
