Market Outlook and Investment Strategy

U.S. Fed finally hiked the interest rate by the end year 2016 as expected, but the hawkish view for further interest rate hikes in year 2017 by three times is beyond the market's expectation. Along with the rising USD Index, both the commodity and bond market got sharp correction. Volatility remained high in all of the markets. As there is very limited room for ECB and BOJ to further expand QE, we expect that the liquidity situation will become more stringent compared to year 2016.

China's latest macro figures were in-line, which also indicated the economy's slow recovery from the trough since the mid-year. The faster growth of power consumption signaled that the manufacturing started to recover quickly. The latest Central Economic Work Conference (CEWC) has not officially announced next year's GDP growth target for the very first time. We noticed that the central government has shifted the focus on economy stability from growth. We expect that the monetary policies will be neutral but a little bit tight in year 2017, and we do not expect any RRR cut or interest rate cut in the near future. The government will continue expanding fiscal stimulus to bolster the economy.
