Market Outlook and Investment

With the steady improvement of US economy growth as well as the increased of core CPI, US Fed turned more hawkish in the latest public speech. Investors started to prepare for the possible interest rate hike as early as in March. US President also stressed to reinforce the investment on infrastructure and national defense, which helped to propel US equity market up to a new historical high. USD remained rather strong given the constant expectation of interest rate hike.

China's latest trade figures were encouraging as the export growth turned positive for the first time after two years' correction. Besides the seasonality distortion, this still could be a very early improving sign of the global demand. The latest PMI figure was also rather strong at 51.7. Accompanying with the increasing materials prices, we also witnessed steady recovery of domestic demands. The central government stressed the financial stability will be the most important task for this year, and PBOC will enforce policies on de-leveraging and financial regulation. We expect neutral or actually tightening monetary policies for year 2017.
