Market Outlook and Investment

US macro figures were mixed but generally were still positive for the market. The 2Q17 GDP growth was recorded at 3.0%; but the core CPI was still below the target at only 1.5%. The Trump administration now initiated tax reform on the corporate tax, in order to attract more US companies moving back their headquarters to domestic market. As both the US Fed and ECB talked dovish in the latest meeting in Jackson Hole, USD and EUR were relatively weak against CNY.

The latest macro figures of China were still decent, as the export increased by 7.2%, and the trade surplus recorded at USD46.7bn. The monetary environment turned relatively loose, as the new yuan loan reached cny825bn, better than expectation. The listed companies in A-share / Hong Kong market generally reported decent growth for the semi-annual results; Auto, cyclical players and TMT outperformed. Prices for basic materials were resilient thanks to the central government's supply-side reform.

In regard to our investment strategy for Hong Kong / China market, we remained relatively optimistic on domestic A-share market for short term. China's Communist Party is scheduled to hold the 19th meeting in the coming October, and we expect that the environment will remain amiable for the financial market. We will take profit on cyclical sectors, but will tilt in sectors with solid profitability, such as insurance and domestic consumption.
