Market Outlook and Investment

The global economy remains on the steady growth track. US reported strong ISM manufacturing PMI in February (60.8). Consumer confidence has returned to pre-crisis levels and businesses are investing at the fastest rate since 2011. Although Yellen left the Fed rate unchanged in a range of 1.25%-1.50% at her last Federal Open Market Committee meeting, the meeting minutes made public on Feb 21 indicated clearly that the path ahead for rates was higher, thanks to the strengthening economy. Market will be closely watching Fed Chairman Jerome Powell's first appearance on the Fed's March meeting. Euro Zone's economy momentum is rather strong. Japan also remains on recovery and Nikkei Manufacturing PMI also remained at the expansion territory for 19 months and recorded 54.1. We believe that the amiable economic environment will help to bolster the strong performance of global equities, though US stock market shall see volatility coming back in 1H18 after long-term growth.

China also reported mixed data. The official manufacturing PMI in Feb recorded at 50.3, which stayed in expansionary territory for the 19th consecutive month though hit an 19 month low, while the Total Social Financing was boosted up to 3060bn CNY compared to previous CNY 1140bn, majorly because of the January effect. We expect the CPI to keep flat or rising mildly thanks to rising commodity prices and the easing hog price. As for the stock market, the CSI300 experienced a pull back by 5.9% and closed at 4024.

Looking forward to 1H18, we believe that the policies of de-leverage will continue and to prevent systemic risk will remain the theme, and thus we expect a neutral/tight monetary policy. We remain positive in Hong Kong/China equities and especially favor sectors that will be benefited from the consumption upgrade momentum in China, such as the healthcare sector and financial leaders, though increasing volatility would be a concern. HKex listed companies are about to release 2017 annual results and we will closely monitor the corporate earnings as well as their future develop strategies to re-assess our investment decisions.
