Market Outlook and Investment

Commodity got universal correction due to declining demands. The correction of oil price has particularly impacted the energy costs for net oil-import countries. US reported ever strong data, while the liquidity remains ample for equity markets.

PBOC unexpectedly cut the interest rate asymmetrically in order to push down the real borrowing rates in the market. While the latest PMI figure indicates that China's domestic economy remains sluggish, we expect that the central government has to handle out more stimulus plans in order to bolster the growth.

Given that the domestic A-share market has rallied for a whole month, we expect that Hong Kong market may follow the suits as long as the liquidity environment remains amiable.
